FORUM SPEAKER GIVES VERY INTERESTING TALK

In the Town Forum at Ocean Beach school auditorium, Tuesday evening, Bert Camparet, San Diego attorney reviewed the book, One Hundred Million Guinea Pigs, telling his audience of the many fraudulent advertising schemes used by patent medicine concerns, manufacturers of tooth pastes, disinfectants and medicines. According to this book, many of the prominently used articles contain deadly poisons and it would be to everyone's advantage to obtain this book and make note of those which are dangerous or have no merit.

Miss McCabe's 5th grade pupils gave a half hour play preceding Attorney Camparet's talk.

June 25, George Brereton, criminal identification expert under Sheriff Dort, will be the main speaker.

Point Loma chapter O. E. S. will meet in regular form, in the Masonic hall on Newport avenue. Monday evening June 17 8 o'clock. Mrs. Ella Cole will be in charge of the social program. All visitors and members are welcome.

Graduation Is Colorful Affair

The Point Loma high school commencement program last evening was a most interesting affair, with the auditorium containing a capacity audience of friends and relatives of the 105 graduates.

The high school orchestra under direction of Myron Green opened the exercises with Rev. James H. Hughes offering the invocation. Robert Merritt, class president, gave the pledge of allegiance. Faith in Youth, was the subject of the class valedictorian, Rosemary Moats. Will C. Crawford, superintendent of schools, gave the main address. Clarence R. Swenson, principal, presented the class. Jacob Weinberger, new member of the board of education, presented the diplomas, then followed the graduation song by the class and the graduating class,and the closing March Militaire by the orchestra.

The stage was a beautiful setting illuminated with pastel lights. Tall baskets of red roses in the forground and greenery in the background, made a picturesque setting for the girl graduates who wore white caps and gowns and the boys in black caps and gowns.

Chamber Commerce Guarantee Bus Fares

Monday evening the Chamber of Commerce held their regular monthly meeting with a number of communicatons read from Senator Ed Fletcher and George B. Bowers.

A resolution was adopted guaranteeing payment of bus fares for bands to take part in the Old Timers Barbecue celebration on June 29. Other methods of cooperating with the Barbecue committee were discussed and voted upon favorably.

A committee volunteered to meet next day with the San Diego city council to watch developments in regard to having a fishing and pleasure pier located here.

Tuesday Messrs. Dumont, Schroder, and David E. Parsons appeared before the council and were told a public hearing would be held before any action was taken regarding a municipal pier at the beaches. It was stated that no money was on hand at present to buy or build a pier and that same would be given considefation in an open hearing before the council and if found favorable would be placed in the budget.

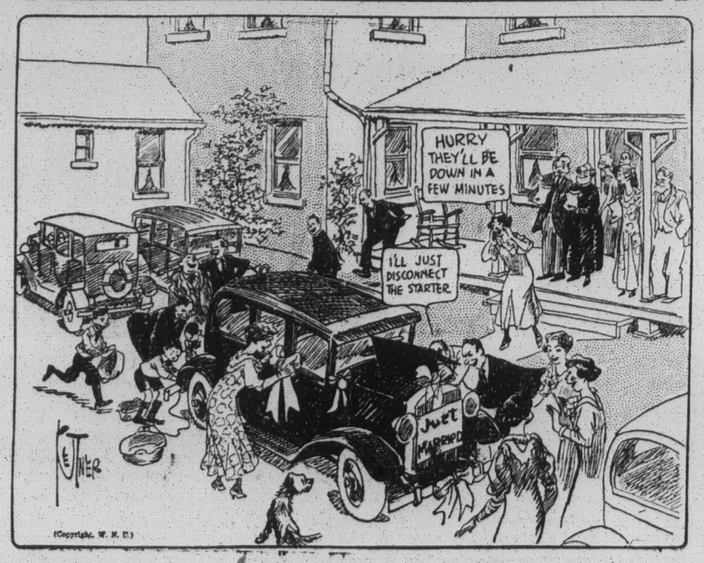
Here Comes the Bride



All County To Join In Gala Expo Day

From all parts of the county thousands will come here next Tuesday, June 18, to see and enjoy their Exposition, and to celebrate San Diego County Day at the Fair.

From Campo to Coronado and from San Onofre to San Ysidro, best bibs and tuckers are being starched in preparation for the gala trek to Balboa Park, scene of America's Exposition.

Twenty years ago an Exposition first placed San Diego in the limelight of international publicity. A few of the magnificent buildings built then have formed the nuceus for the present great spectacle that attracted more than a quarter of a million persons through its turnstiles during the first week.

And now a special day has been dedicated to the "home folks" thruout the county, that they may come and see for themselves the wonders that brain and brawn, co-ordinated, have wrought in their front yard.

Oceanside will send its crack 50-piece municipal band to present an hour's program, from 3:30 to 4:30 p. m.; at the mammoth outdoor organ amphitheatre.

More than 200 members of the San Diego County Development federation will attend the annual dinner of that organization in the Palisades Cafe at the Exposition; it will start at 6:30 p. m. A distinguished speaker, orchestra and soloists are highlights of the program to be presented later in the auditorium of the House of Hospitality.

Every city, town and hamlet in the county will be virtually evacuated for the day, expected to be one of the outstanding events of the entire Exposition. Added interest will be furnished by the combined Atlantic and Pacific Fleets now riding at anchor in San Diego harbor or in the Coronado roadstead.

Bert Wenrich To Build New Home

Bert Wenrich recently bought a view lot at 4461 Narragansett Ave., Ocean Beach, and this week was granted a building permit for a frame-stucco residence and garage to cost $4,000.

Mr. and Mrs. Wenrich are 'long-time-residents' of the Beach and while they have other properties here they have always wanted a home on the hill overlooking this fast building community, and with an unexcelled view of the blue Pacific.

ALASKA TRADE AND GOODWILL EXCURSION

Business men and other residents of Southern California have been invited to join with the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce on its sixth Alaskan Trade and Goodwill excursion, it was stated here today by A. D. Hagaman, local representative Southern Pacific Lines.

Enroute north there will be sightseeing trips in San Francisco and Portland, while at Seattle the Steamer Yukon will be boarded for the special sailing through the Inside Passage to the land of Midnight Sun.

Stops are to be made at Ketchikan, Wrangell, Juneau, the Indian village of Yakutat, Cordova, Valdez, Seward and other novel points of interest, including the Matanuska Valley where the government is placing many midwestern families on its gigantic colonization project.

The steamer is scheduled to return to Seattle on July 11, from where the train again will be boarded for the remainder of the journey home.

Barbecue Plans On Real Parade

Ocean Beach's Old Timers Barbecue committees met Wednesday evening, and plans are well along now for a gala celebration all day and evening of Saturday, June 29th.

The barbecue committee reported their plans practically complete and an estimate had been made to feed 1,500 people.

George Speer in charge of the parade for the V.F.W. reported Bonham Bros. Boys' band of more than a hundred pieces would be in parade as well as wagons and horses from the city barns, horses of the Loma Air Riding Academy. SPECIAL NOTICE ABOUT REPORTING FIRES

Lieut. Crutchfield of the Ocean Beach fire station says, property owners who call the fire department here should ring the central station in order to save time. Minutes count in case of a fire and all calls must be sent to central station before beng answered, therefore if someone calls Ocean Beach by phone about a fire, the message must be transmitted to central station, and possibly half a minute or more is lost during this transmittal.

Remember then folks, to call San Diego fire department when in a rush, you get quicker response that way.

THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY: POINT LOMA

"The Alchemy of Love" will be the subject of the public forum-lecture at Theosophical headquarters Point Loma, next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The speaker will be Reata V. H. FIREMEN GUESTS OF OCEAN BEACH KIWANIANS

George E. Courser, battalion chief and J. M. Crutchfield, lieutenant, of the San Diego fire department were guests of Ocean Beach Kiwanis club, Wednesday noon. Fireman Courser told of the firemen's organization, time of duty, etc. He said each of the 20 San Diego fire stations had a captain and lieutenant in charge, and that we have 23 companies and one fire boat here. The fire boat was made by firemen during their spare time at a cost of $25,000 for materials. Mr. Courser said the beach district had very good water pressure and as a rule did not need to use their pumps during a fire. This organization keeps a watchful eye on 95 square miles of the city's territory. He said, it paid to watch your fire hazards and be careful at all times. Average time of getting out of a station after the sound of the alarm was twenty seconds. Lieut. Crutchfield is stationed with the Ocean Beach unit.

I. J. Claspill was chairman of the day's program. Dr. I. W. Parks sang a solo and a letter of farewell and appreciation was tendered Dick Barbour. Kiwanian Eastman of La Jolla and Dr. Goldsmith of San Diego were visitors. Myron Insko had as a guest, George Harris, head of Goodwill Industries of San Diego.

CURRENT EVENTS PASS IN REVIEW

SUPREME COURT INVALIDATES NRA AND FRAZIER-LEMKE FARM MORTGAGE ACT.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

THREE unanimous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States shook the New Deal to its very foundations. In the first and most important, read by Chief Justice Hughes the heart was cut out of the NRA, for the court ruled that the entire code structure of the act was invalid, the code making provisions being an unconstitutional delegation by congress of its authority to legislate to persons not connected with the government's legislative functions. By the ruling the exercise of congressional powers over commerce was definitely restricted to interstate commerce, or to such activities as have a provable direct connection with interstate commerce. The court held that no economic emergency could justify the breaking down of the limitations upon federal authority as prescribed by the Constitution or of those powers reserved to the state through the failure of the Constitution to place them elsewhere.

Next in importance was the decision read by Justice Brandeis, holding unconstitutional the Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage moratorium act. This law provided for a five year moratorium in the case of collapse of efforts to scale down a farmer's debts to a figure that would enable him to pay off his mortgage. The court held that under the Fifth amendment to the Constitution private property could not be taken without just compensation. There has been no previous instance, the court said, where a mortgage was forced to relinquish property to a mortgagor free of lien unless the debt was paid in full.

In the third decision President Roosevelt's dismissal of the late William E. Humphrey from the federal trade commission was held illegal because the President did not remove Mr. Humphrey for the statutory grounds of inefficiency, neglect of duty or malfeasance in office, but, as the President stated, because their minds did not meet upon the policies or administration of the commission.

THERE was consternation and confusion among the administration forces in Washington, and no one could say immediately just how much the New Deal had been damaged or what could be done to repair the damage to its structure. Donald Richberg, chairman of the national industrial recovery board, after a White House conference, issued a statement saying that "all methods of compulsory enforcement of the codes will be immediately suspended." He added that the administration now faced the problem of "maintaining the gains which have been made in the last two years," and expressed the hope that employers would voluntarily maintain "fair standards of commercial and labor relations."

Senator Pat Harrison said he believed congress should proceed rapidly with the enactment of appropriate legislation to continue NRA in some form, and Senator Robinson thought it would not be difficult to provide for new codes to prevent unfair trade practices.

The question of the constitutionality of the Wagner labor disputes bill, passed by the senate, was raised by the NRA decision. The opinion was widely expressed that collective bargaining now cannot be enforced in any business enterprise by federal statute.

In the senate demands were voiced to recommit to the committee on agriculture the amendments strengthening the AAA. Senator W. E. Borah said that the NRA decision clearly raises the question of the validity of much AAA procedure.

FRANK C. WALKER'S present job as head of the division of allotments and information in connection with the work-relief program is not so important as had been expected, and probably by the end of the year or earlier he will be able to delegate his duties to others. Then, according to current rumors, he will enter the President's cabinet as postmaster general, to succeed Jim Farley.

Frank C. Walker

Mr. Farley has definitely decided to retire from the cabinet —voluntarily, it is said —so that he can devote all his time and energy to directing the campaign of Mr. Roosevelt for renomination and re-election. He expects to remain not only as chairman of the national Democratic committee but also as chairman of the New York state committee. In order that he may have an income he plans to make a business connection with an important organization that will not interfere with his political activities.

There has been a lot of talk about Mr. Farley's alleged ambition to be governor of New York. Melvin C. Eaton, Republican state chairman, dares him to run for that position. In a speech at Syracuse, Mr. Eaton said:

"For years, now, Mr. Farley has fancied himself as a candidate for governor of New York. He has repeatedly told his very close associates that he will 'run when the time is ripe.' I challenge Mr. Farley to be the Democratic candidate for governor in 1936. I challenge him to run on his record. I know a great many Democrats who are ready and willing to contribute lavishly to a Farley-for-governor campaign fund, for no other reason than to get a crack at him through the polls."

ONLY nine states of the Central West will send delegates to the "Grass Roots" convention of the Republican party which opens June 10 in Springfield, Ill., but the meeting will nevertheless be rather national in scope, for it will be attended by unofficial delegates from other states and by national leaders of the party. It was believed that Harrison E. Spangler, national committeeman from Iowa, would be made temporary chairman and as such would deliver the keynote address. Others on the tentative program for speeches are Arthur M. Hyde, former governor of Missouri and secretary of agriculture in the Hoover cabinet, and Edward Hayes of Decatur, Ill., former national commander of the American Legion.

A. M. Hyde

The keynote address, according to reports, will take inventory of American affairs under the Roosevelt New Deal and indicate the trend of the party in opposition. Mr. Hyde is to talk on the Great Emancipator at the Lincoln tomb in Oak Ridge cemetery, and Hayes is expected to deal with the theories of the Republican party on constitutional government.

IN the May survey published by the American Federation of Labor industry is charged with withholding 4,000,000 jobs in a "strike" against New Deal legislative proposals. The survey referred to powerful lobbies against the Wagner labor disputes and 30-hour week bills; holding company control and the banking act; NRA and economic security legislation. The opposition grew into "open revolt" in resolutions passed early in May by the United States Chamber of Commerce, the labor federation said.

On the other hand, President Green of the federation has been openly threatening a general strike of organized labor if the measures mentioned above are not enacted. How many jobs a general strike would take away from workers now employed has not been closely estimated. There seems to be a lack of consistency somewhere.

SETTING a new precedent, President Roosevelt "acted as his own messenger" and personally returned to Speaker Byrne the Patman bonus measure with his disapproval. Before a joint session of the house and senate and crowded galleries the Chief Executive read his veto message, an able and well ordered document in which he set forth his conviction that "the welfare of the nation as well as the future welfare of the veterans wholly justifies my disapproval of this measure." Asserting that an able-bodied citizen, even though he wore a uniform, should not be accorded treatment different from that of other citizens, he said:

President Roosevelt

"The veteran who is disabled owes his condition to the war. The healthy veteran who is unemployed owes his troubles to the depression. Any attempt to mingle the two problems is to confuse our efforts."

Mr. Roosevelt's stern warning against the dangers of inflation inherent in the measure was listened to in silence, though there was mild applause at other times. All his argument was in vain so far as the house was concerned, for as he left the chamber there were quick demands for a vote and by the time he had reached the White House the representatives had overriden his veto and again passed the bill by a vote of 322 to 98. In the affirmative were 248 Democrats, 64 Republicans, 7 Progressives and 3 Farmer-Laborites. Those voting to sustain the veto were 60 Democrats and 38 Republicans.

The debate in the senate was long and perfervid, and quite unnecessary because the result of the vote had been a certainty for several days. Fifty-four senators voted to override the veto; but 40 supported the President, and only 32 were needed to kill the measure.

SECRETARY HULL signed a reciprocal tariff bargain with Sweden, the fifth to be completed under his program which he has been promoting for about a year. The results of his efforts have been seemingly small and consequently a good many people are paying more attention to the alternative plan advocated by George N. Peek, special adviser to the President on foreign trade. The Peek proposals embody a system of trade restrictions such as have been adopted by most other nations, and he warmly argued in their behalf before the Mississippi Valley foreign trade conference at St. Louis, only a few hours before Mr. Hull signed the pact with Sweden.

LAWSON LITTLE, the brawny young Californian, won the British amateur golf championship for the second consecutive year, being the first American to accomplish that feat. His final match with Dr. William Tweddell ended only on the thirty-sixth green, and he decided to take a month's rest before competing in the British open.

HAWAII was treated to a magnificent display of American naval power in the Pacific that continued through two days. First the forty planes that had taken part in the mid-Pacific maneuvers returned and the entire armada of 225 planes participated in an aerial review. Then the vessels of the fleet returned and moved to Pearl Harbor, the great naval base, which they all entered in a crucial test of the harbor's capacity as an anchorage. The navy's largest submarines were with the battleships and cruisers, and there were 700 marines on the target ship Utah.

The personnel of the underwater fleet had some strange tales to tell, for the submarines had just completed the longest cruise ever undertaken by fighting craft of that kind—nearly a month at sea.

Navy Memorial day in Japan, the thirtieth anniversary of Admiral Togo's destruction of the Russian fleet, brought forth a pamphlet from the navy's propaganda bureau which made significant allusions to the United States. It said:

"Then Russia was the rival and the danger. Today that is changed. We have had to face in another direction. We are confronting another great sea power which is increasing its navy with Japan as the target.

"We need a navy sufficient to protect our sea routes to the continent of Asia and to face the menace in the direction of the great ocean. That is why Japan demands parity with the greatest navies. If Japan's just and reasonable demands are rejected by the powers, causing failure of the efforts to reach a new naval agreement and leading to a naval construction race, the responsibility will not be ours. In such case the only thing for Japan to do is to resort to resolute measures for self-protection."

THOUGH the League of Nations council ended its session in Geneva with the hope that it had arranged matters so that war between Italy and Ethiopia would be averted, the prospects for such a settlement are not bright. Under pressure from Great Britain and France, Mussolini consented to recognize the league's jurisdiction over the quarrel and agreed to arbitration. But immediately thereafter Il Duce told the chamber of deputies in Rome he would not allow Germany to make of Ethiopia "a pistol perennially pointed at us in case of trouble in Europe" and asserted he was ready to take the supreme responsibility to sustain by every means Italy's position in east Africa. He alluded bitterly to Britain and France, and indicated that he believed that Ethiopia was perfecting its army with the help of European powers inimical to Italy.

Benito Mussolini

Il Duce admitted the problem of defense was one involving great difficulties in strategy in supplying troops. He accused those "who can pretend to be stupefied or simulate protests against the military measures which we have taken or those which we will take" of being enemies of Fascist Italy.

Following this address, Mussolini ordered the mobilization of thousands of officers and technical experts of the class of 1912.

REICHSFUEHRER HITLER, appearing before the reichstag, outlined a 13 point program for disarmament and the improvement of international relations, and did it so well it cannot well be ignored by the other nations of Europe. He again rejected the resolution of the League of Nations council condemning him for the rearming of Germany, but said Germany might return to the league if that body divorced itself from the principles of the Versailles treaty and from the "psychology of victors and vanquished" and "after Germany is granted full equality rights, extending to all functions and privileges in international life."

To the great satisfaction of Great Britain, Hitler promised to respect the territorial clauses of the Versailles treaty, which, he said, could not be modified by unilateral action. He declared Germany was willing to sign non-aggression pacts with all her neighbors except Lithuania, and to agree to an arms embargo if others would do the same. Also the reich is ready to sign an air convention supplementing the Locarno pact.

THREE world's records were smashed and another tied by Jesse Owens, the wonderful colored athlete of Ohio State university, in the Western Conference meet at Ann Arbor. The new marks he set were: 220 yard dash, 0:20.3; 220 yard low hurdles, 0:22.6; and running broad jump, 26 feet, 4¼ inches. He won the 100 yard dash in 0:09.4, which equals the world record set by Frank Wykoff in 1930. The meet was won by Michigan.

MISS JANE ADDAMS, "first citizen of Chicago," internationally famed as a social worker and peace advocate, has gone to her reward, and her passing is deeply mourned by the many thousands of poor and unfortunate persons for whom she had made life more endurable. She started her real life work in 1889 among the Italians and other foreigners on Chicago's West side, founding Hull House, which grew into the most famous social settlement in America. Later her activities were extended to the amelioration of sweat shop conditions, the child labor problem, and then to the matter of international peace.

THE UNKNOWN

By ANNE CAMPBELL

I DO not know which way the road may lead
Tomorrow.
My soul may tremble like a broken reed
To sorrow;
But though unknown the dark untraveled way,
I have Today!

This day is steeped in joy! Each shining minute
Has gladness in it.
No black forebodings steal the skies' clear blue;
The sun shines through,
And golden lies the path that winds this hour
To love in flower.

I have Today! I face it gratefully,
Intending,
No matter where the road that's meant for me
Is wending
To walk it as the saints their hard way trod,
With faith in God!

HOLY FACES ON POSTAGE STAMPS

Issues Have Given Rise to Much Comment.

Religion has become an important factor in the designs of postage stamps. Characters from both the Old and New Testament, their deeds and deaths, have been depicted on the colorful labels that prepay mail to points far distant from the land where the godly men once gave counsel.

Jesus Christ was first shown on a stamp in 1895 when Portugal and its colonies observed the Seventh century of the birth of St. Anthony of Padua. On it is shown the vision of the saint when he beholds the Infant Christ in the heavens. The reverse side of the issue reveals a printed prayer of the "Blessed Tongue."

The most outstanding stample portrayal of Jesus Christ presents him with his disciples. The stamp first appeared in Italy in 1923 in commemoration of the tercentenary of the death of Pope Gregory XV.

From all sides praise and criticism were heaped upon the heads of the Italian postal system. Many persons felt that the cancellation of these stamps was akin to blasphemy as the holy image would be marred. To counteract this feeling post office authorities were ordered to cancel only the outer edge of the stamps, thus preventing mutilation of the portraits.

A large group, more liberal in thought, praised the new stamps, remarking that such an effort was valuable missionary work. As a result of the favorable comment, many people purchased sets of the stamps and framed them. Only a few were actually used and Italy, sensing the popularity of stamps featuring members of the church, went on to print new stamps commemorating religious events.

In Palestine, home of the three leading religions of the world, postage stamps depict the Tomb of Rachel, the Mosque of Omar and the Sea of Galilee, important factors in the spiritual laws of the present-day world.

Even the ancient pagan beliefs have been characterized on postal emissions. Peru, origin of the Inca, features the sun, the god of that extinct race. Greece and France devoted the majority of their early stamp issues to the depiction of the old gods of mythology.

Despite Egypt's history, so interwoven with its ancient gods, it has only shown some of them on postage stamps in the past decade.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

AN ENEMY PROVES TO BE A FRIEND

The things we do and things we say,
('Tis true though hard to believe it so)
Affect the lives of other folk
More often than we ever know.

SO it is that friends often hurt each other and in the same way enemies help each other without the least idea of so doing. It is a funny world. It certainly is a funny world. You think only of yourself and straightway do the greatest possible kindness or an equally great harm to some one of whom you are not thinking at all, and never know anything about it.

Danny Overheard Mrs. Hooty Tell Hooty That She Had Seen and Heard Some One Moving Down Below.

Just take the case of Mrs. Hooty and Danny Meadow Mouse. Danny always thought of Mrs. Hooty, just as he did of Hooty, as one of the enemies he must always be on the watch for after dark, and Mrs. Hooty always thought of Danny Meadow Mouse simply as a good dinner if only she could catch him. The idea of doing Danny a good turn never in all her life had entered her head. Nor had the idea that she could do such a thing ever entered Danny's funny little head. Yet Mrs. Hooty did do Danny a good turn. In fact, all unknowingly she proved to be a friend.

You remember that Billy Mink had trapped Danny in a hollow log in the Green Forest. Billy couldn't get into that hollow log because the doorway was too small. So he promptly told Danny that he would keep watch until Danny starved to death inside or came out to be caught. Then Hooty the Owl and Mrs. Hooty arrived in a tree close by and Danny overheard Mrs. Hooty tell Hooty that she had seen and heard some one moving down below and that she intended to stay right there until she found out who it was.

Danny at once thought that she was watching for him. But when he had had time to think a little he remembered that he hadn't so much as poked his nose outside that hollow log since the coming of Mrs. Hooty, so of course she couldn't have seen him. Could it have been Billy Mink she had seen? Danny at once became very much interested and crept a little nearer the doorway. He wanted very much to see what was going on outside.

For some time nothing happened. Then he heard Hooty's voice way off in the distance. He crept just a wee bit closer to the doorway and peeped up in the top of the tree where he had heard Mr. and Mrs. Hooty talking. He was just in time to see a great dark shadow sweep silently down. He heard a spiteful snarl and knew then that Mrs. Hooty had tried to catch Billy Mink and had missed him. And he knew, too, that, having escaped, Billy would waste no time hanging about there, but would seek a safer place.

Danny let a little sigh of relief escape. Mrs. Hooty had frightened Billy Mink away and did not herself know that Danny was there. He was no longer trapped. She who would gladly have eaten him had proved a friend by setting him free. Didn't I say that this is a funny world?

QUESTION BOX

by ED WYNN, The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

In the past ten days I have read in the newspapers of thirty-four men committing crimes. I discovered, by keeping tabs on them, that twenty-eight of the thirty-four men ran away to Canada. How do you account for that?

C. KLUSIVE.

Answer: I am surprised, as I thought everybody knew that it was the only place "Toronto."

Dear Mr. Wynn:

A friend of mine has just returned from a trip through the South American tropics and he said that sometimes, while walking along, he would sink 10 and 12 inches in the ground. What struck me rather peculiar was his assertion that farmers lived there and cattle grazed all around. How could cattle exist in mud like that?

Yours truly,
E. QUATER.

Answer: Your friend is right. I have been where he speaks of and I have seen the mud so deep down there that the farmers had to jack the cows up to milk them.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

Don't you think a man will succeed better in life if he goes by the following rule: "Live and let live"?

Truly yours,
HAMMOND EGGS.

Answer: That is a great rule for every one excepting a butcher.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I have often heard that the worst blow one can receive is the kick of a mule. Do you think a mule can kick harder than a kangaroo?

Yours truly,
ANN TIPODES.

Answer: I have never been kicked by a kangaroo, but once a mule succeeded in kicking me, and for the following six months every time I sat down I left "foot-prints."

DELICIOUS FRUIT DRINKS

DURING the summer when much water is lost from the body by perspiration, more water should be taken in some form. The easiest drink one knows about is lemonade, refreshing, cooling and easy to take as well as make. Keep in the ice chest a jar of the lemon juice boiled with sugar and water to form a fruit sirup. A mixture of grapefruit juice, lemon and orange, is another drink well liked. Having a sugar sirup made to use for sweetening is a great convenience, as it sweetens at once and does not drop to the bottom like sugar and has to be stirred to be dissolved. Those who like honey use it often in preference to sugar, as it is the best sugar to give children, being easily digested.

When company drops in and needs quick refreshment on a hot day, try an orange ginger ale. For each person combine two-thirds of a cup of orange juice, one-third of a cup of ginger ale, pour over a glass of cracked ice and serve at once. For a delightful ice cream soda serve a glass two-thirds full of orange juice and add a ball of vanilla ice cream. Stir rapidly and serve. Orange juice with lemon juice is liked by many as a combination drink. Iced coffee served as an ice cream soda drink is most delicious. Drop in the ball of ice cream and serve at once. One should remember when serving these refreshing drinks that they are not only cooling to the body, delightful to the palate, but are supplying the body with needed minerals and vitamins for health.

Apple Straws.

Wash and grate a red-skinned apple. Place in sherbet glass and cover with the juice of an orange. Top with freshly grated coconut, chopped nuts and dates. Omit the topping for very young children and also remove the apple skin.

Wild Geese Can Be Confused

The directional sense of the wild goose, while incredibly accurate most of the time, is by no means infallible. Thick weather, wind storms and other natural hazards sometimes confuse whole flocks and lead them to destruction.

"OLD GLORY"

The celebration of Flag Day has become a national fixture and every year we pay our respects to "Old Glory" with more emphasis, patriotism and enthusiasm. It is a proud privilege as a citizen of the United States, to have a part in this grand celebration of the stars and stripes.

The flag stands for freedom and independence; it is the emblem of a hard-earned victory that is enduring and secure. The inhabitants, as American citizens, have decreed to stand by the Old Flag of freedom, so today Friday the 14 we renew our vows, by proclaiming allegiance to the stars and stripes the emblem of Liberty.

The first flag in the American colonies was designed by Benjamin Franklin in 1747, when there arose fear of invasion by French and Spanish attacks. With many pre-Revolutionary controversies, flags of European countries were displayed with defiant mottos. The American flag outclassed them all; it was an outstanding figure that blazed its way for the colonists.

When Gen. George Washington assumed command of the colonial forces on January 2, 1766, the "Grand Union" flag fluttered in the breezes; it consisted of 13 red and white stripes with a British Union jack in a blue canton. This flag did not last long for the Revolutionary forces determined to proclaim their independence against any invasion which they expected would soon occur. On August 2, 1777, a hurriedly improvised flag was adopted with 13 red and white stripes and 13 white stars on a blue canton, in place of the Union jack. The new flag was authorized by the Continental Congress, June 14, 1777, just 158 years ago.

The historical career of Old Glory shows many pitfalls but backed by sturdy determination to fight for the goal—American Independence. Since April 4, 1818, the American flag represented by the original 13 stripes and 48 stars, a new star being added with every new state admitted into the Union.

No reckless person need to expect solace if he drives an automobile, for the traffic situation has grown so intensely complex that he is constantly in danger whenever he has his hands on the wheel. Congestion on streets and highways increases with surprising rapidity because more cars are driven. Of the 3,927,121 cars in the world, 24,751,644 are in the United States and about one-sixth of these are in California. There is no room on the street or highway for the careless driver who risks not only his own life, but the thousands who must suffer through his mistakes. Unless there is some sort of a Golden Rule application adopted as a general plan, in the congested areas, the toll of death and maimed will increase. If people who drive cars, could be made to agree not to violate the road laws, see the error of reckless driving, then ban the drunk-driver by taking his license away from him, and he pledged to observe the ordinary courtesies of the road, then, perhaps, we would realize some solution of the hazardous problems. Some jester has remarked that if all the road hogs were laid end to end, the streets would be so full of pork that you could get chops for a penny a pound.

Elementary school population is growing at a surprising rate. No pupil demands educational attention more than children. As a result of the tremendous increase there is need of more and larger school buildings. More of the best educated men and women are attracted to the service of teaching in the elementary schools. The classes are too big. Hundreds of buildings ought to be pulled down and modern buildings erected. More space is needed for physical exercise; more playing fields; more books. There was never a time when there were so many constructive and instructive tasks waiting to be done. Unless the children are given the elementary principles of learning, the purpose and groundwork of education will be lost. To go along with teaching standards, there must be adequate facilities. The boards of education in the land have a great obligation to meet. It is not only the right investment in a financial way, but an investment in currency of character and mental equipment.

Loyalty to the Constitution of the United States is the first and most important duty of any citizen. We are hearing plenty of harassing remarks—words that put doubts and a lot of question marks in peoples' beliefs. Whoever disregards the Constitution, should embark to other shores. There is no room here for these disturbers. The blessings of constitutional liberty are established and to maintain them demands irrevocable loyalty to country and a solemn defense of the flag. Forefathers of our noble land knew what they were doing when they formulated and entered into a contract of partnership whereby the people of the United States agreed to set up, maintain and perpetuate this, the world's greatest venture in democracy. They learned that liberty consists not in doing what one wishes but in doing what one ought.

It is humanlike to place more stress on education than any other accomplishment attainable. Why not, when education is the great social and industrial leader in almost every branch of achievement? Education requires an alert mind and a sound intellect, and it is therefore just as important that there be sufficient physical stamnia, or there will be insufficient vigor to carry one through the school grades to graduation. There may be failures in pupils from weak mentality, but of the two it seems just as important to have a strong physique as brains. This is why physical culture is a large part of the educational course in all school and college work. A physically trained body makes a healthy person and supplies the student with a well balanced mind and body for the big tasks in learning.

Harold Bell Wright, California's famous novelist is not flourishing his pen with the same magnitude as in past years. There's a reason, since he recently purchased an estate in the Escondido hills, and much of his time is devoted to clearing and making improvements. He calls it "Quiet Hills Farm," where he is now back to work getting out new stories. The novelist seems to have a childish pride in his possession, for when asked about the size of his holding, his face brightened and with a smile, he said: "I pay taxes on 60 acres and own every bit of it."

CHURCHES OF CHRIST, SCIENTIST

"The Lord giveth wisdom: . . . He keepeth the paths of judgment, and preserveth the way of his saints." These promises from the Proverbs are the Golden Text in the Lesson-Sermon on "God the Preserver of Man" on Sunday in all branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.

Among the Bible selections in the Lesson-Sermon are these words of Jesus from the Gospel of Matthew: "For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." "But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him."

A passage from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, states: "God is Love. Can we ask him to be more? God is intelligence. Can we inform the infinite Mind of anything He does not already comprehend? Do we expect to change perfection? Shall we plead for more at the open fount, which is pouring forth more than we accept?"

Highest honors in citizenship and service to the school, a beautiful gold medal and the honor of having their names engraved on the Jessie D. Thompkins Citizenship cup, were presented to Fielder Lutes, senior high student body president, and Mary Shreve, vice president of the A. S. B. The citizenship cup was presented to the winners by Mrs. Frank Levin, president of the Point Loma PTA. Honorable mention in citizenship and service was given to William Leonard Robert Merritt, Ella Cook and Betty Curtis.

Highest honors in scholarship were won by Rosemary Moats and Jeanne Lehman who tied with a total of thirty credit "A's" out of the thirty-two required for graduation. Both are entitled to the gold seal of scholarship on their diplomas and the Roman Lamp pin, which were also won by Mary Shreve and Stuart Fraser. The right to wear the Torch Pin for three semesters' membership in the Honor society was won by Nina Kline and Ella Cook. Miss Irma Gibson, Honor society sponsor, presented the scholarship awards.

The FLEET-'SIN

To further the celebration of the pre-return of the Navy's fleet, the Ocean Beach baseball club entertained the U.S.S. Wright nine at Collier park Sunday afternoon, June 9th.

The Ocean Beach team has been pretty cocky for the past six months having won 23 straight games. The jinx took a hand on May 26th and June 2nd when they tasted the bitter dregs of defeat.

At the end of the 5th inning the score was 2 to 2. The Navy scored through errors while Ocean Beach had one unearned run and one legitimate run by virtue of Mr. Simpson's home run swat.

At this period the pitchers were changed on both sides, Mr. Chadwick taking Mr. Simpson's place while Mr. Miller did likewise for Mr. Turkette. The Navy boys kept the situation well in hand throughout the balance of the game and if turkeys were selling for five cents a pound our boys could not have bought enough salt to put on a jay bird's tail as far as runs were concerned, while the Navy scored 3 or 4 more runs to take home the bacon, if any.

From a spectator's point of view the features of the game were the home run by Mr. Simpson—the first base play by Mr. Miller—the grass fire—and the vaudeville entertainment the last few innings.

Mr. Miller s built like Babe Ruth, tall, fat, and loose-jointed. He is a port-sider and on his right fin he had a glove that looked like a full grown stingaree. Loose-jointedly his old right arm would flash to the dirt, the sky, the right and to the left and the old stingaree would freeze onto the ball repeatedly. He was good—too good.

Seven balls were fouled into the wild oats and they had to burn the grass to find the balls so the game could be finished.

During the latter part of the game the crowd was entertained by high class vaudeville acts between innings. A gentleman who imitated Charlie Chaplin with a bamboo cane, a lady in blue who carried a feather duster, and a lady in red who juggled a bottle, were the performers. You would be surprised that with such meager stage equipment as a cane, a feather duster and a bottle, that such a wonderful act could be put on, but we all live to learn. The title of the act was, "To Have and To Hold." The gentleman retired very early. As the crowd dispersed, the lady in blue was still nimbly navigating but the lady in red was draped over a bench like a cast-off burlap gunny sack and was murmuring, "Mussher wuz right, you can't eat your cake and have it too, I'll shay."

ANITA LOOS

A friends of my husband's was asked by his bride to copy off a radio recipt that she wanted. He did his best but got two stations at once, one of which was broadcasting the morning exercises and the other, the recipe. This is what he took down:

Hands on the hips, place one cup of flour on your shoulder, raise knees and depress toes and mix thoroughly in one-half cupfull of milk; repeat six times. Inhale quickly one-half teaspoonful of baking powder; lower the legs and mash two hard-boiled eggs in a sieve, exhale, breathe naturally and sift into a bowl.

Attention! Lie flat on the floor and roll in the white of an egg backward and forward until it comes to a boil. In ten minutes remove from the fire, and rub smartly with a rough towel. Breathe naturally, dress in warm flannels and serve with fish soup.

MAY, GOODWILL REPORT SHOWS LARGE INCREASE

Rev. Myron Insko, Ocean Beach, superintendent of the San Diego County Goodwill Industries, in submitting his monthly report to the board of directors covering the work for May, states that several new high records were gained during the month. The free employment service, which is a part of the work for the unemployed done by this philanthropic institution, placed more men and women in outside work than in any previous month. The store sales for the month were the best for the San Diego organization in any month in its history.

The number of truck calls was so great as to make it impossible to make the rounds within the ordinary working hours, and the number of full Goodwill bags turned in showed that the depression was lessening, for it was the greatest in the history of San Diego generosity.

The average number of workers at the Goodwill plant during the month was 38 daily. The total of different workers during the month was 120.

BAPTIST CHURCH SERVICES

A special feature of the Sunday evening 7:30 hour service at the Baptist church, will be a talk by Rev. A. F. Newcomb of Los Angeles. His subject will be John Barleycorn on Parole.

Rev. W. S. Dunn's subject for the 11 a. m. service will be "An Awakened Church."

Mrs. Anna Mulville will have charge of the Sunday school at 9:45.

Yu'an Hee See Laughs

SYNOPSIS

Matt Kearney, young American living in London, says good-by to his sister Eileen, on board the Wallaroo bound for Colombo. The Wallaroo is conveying £2,000,000 in gold to Australia. Kearney meets Inspector Dawson Haig, of Scotland Yard, very much in love with Eileen. Haig is convinced opium is concealed in Jo Lung's warehouse. Called to other duty, he delegates Kearney, with Detective Norwich, to visit the place and find out what he can. While in the warehouse Kearney picks up a notebook. Yu'an Hee See, Chinaman, whom Haig has long been seeking as the leader of a band of international thieves, is at Jo Lung's. Discovering the loss of his notebook, he sends two of his followers after Norwich and Kearney, one of whom he realizes must have picked it up.

The little notebook in his pocket!

He had meant to speak to Norwich about it, but changing his mind had determined to examine it himself and then to hand it over to Haig when he met him. His idea that it might prove to contain some piece of evidence of value to Scotland Yard assumed a new and grave importance.

Coming upon it after the discovery of the Dakenham opals, he had appropriated it without scruple. Now, watching slowly approaching head lamps, and questioning the reality of that figure which he believed he had seen dart into hiding, he remembered that he was unarmed. And he wondered. . . .

Nearer and nearer came the lamps. He stepped out onto the edge of the curb and raised his arm. The man pulled up.

Kearney opened the door, uttered an audible gasp of relief, jumped in, and banged it shut behind him. Twisting about, Matt looked through the rear window.

Baleful eyes glared in at him! Someone, indistinguishable except for his eyes, was clinging to the back of the cab!

"My G—d!" Kearney whispered.

Suddenly, those weird eyes, which seemed to belong to no tangible body, disappeared. . . . The taxi was well under way now.

Kearney craned through the open window, looking back.

Fog . . . desolation . . . nothing!

But one or two belated pedestrians, notably a constable, as the taxi passed into Fleet street, observed upon the luggage rack surmounting its roof what looked like a rolled up blanket, or, as another thought, a very dilapidated kit bag. . . .

* * * * * * * *

Dawson Haig hurried across the little court in which Kearney's rooms were situated. The old manservant who looked after the place opened the door at once. He knew Haig well.

"I'm sure it's very important, sir," he said, "but Mr. Kearney had to go across to the office the moment he arrived home."

"But what's this about some book?"

"The book is lying on the desk upstairs, sir, with a note, and my orders are for you to go up."

Two minutes later he sat at Kearney's table, reading the note which his friend had left. Haig had not removed his white raincoat. A Yard car was waiting—and a ghastly duty called. . . .

But, as he read, his expression changed—grew puzzled—and then indicated sudden excitement. The little leather-bound memo book, to which Kearney's note chiefly related, lay upon the table beside him. It was really an advertisement issued by one of the shipping companies, containing a calendar and all sorts of odds and ends of information about tides, and such-like material.

He picked it up again, glancing at the curious penciled entries it contained. The book was newly issued, and these were few. Some were unintelligible, being written in what looked like a combination of cipher and Chinese. But others, opposite to certain dates, set him furiously thinking.

Suddenly he stood up, shed his raincoat, and dropped it with his hat on the floor. By heavens! he might be better employed here than down in Limehouse!

The first of these intriguing notes appeared against the date the 11th—the day which had just passed. It read as follows:

"D 21—25—32. B 7—B 4."

The last number—B 4—had been written on the margin of the opposite page as though it were an afterthought, but a delta and pencil line indicated that it should be added to the others.

Under date of the 13th was:

"Paris. Suleiman Bey's."

For the following three days the diary contained no notes, but under date the 17th the following appeared:

"D 41."

A gap until the 22d, and then occurred the entry:

"Mohammed."

On the following day, the 23d, the writer had scribbled something which Haig was unable to read. But on the 24th came this curious item.

"18° 34' N. and 41° 5, E."

Finally, against date the 25th, appeared a cross in red ink. This was the last entry.

Dawson Haig reread Kearney's note and looked for and found a leaflet referred to. It was one issued by the steamship company, and it gave the dates at which the Wallaroo touched ports en route to Brisbane, Australia.

Very deliberately, although his brain was on fire, he compared certain entries in the memo book with this leaflet. The date, the 17th, corresponded to that at which the ship reached Marseilles; the next—the 22d—to that when she arrived at Port Said! The final dates meant nothing to him, except that he estimated them to correspond to the Wallaroo's position at some place south of Suez.

Of course, Kearney might have set him off on a wild-goose chase, and these entries bear no relation to the voyage of the Wallaroo. But, considering where the book came from, what was he to think?

And "B 4" was the number of Eileen's stateroom!

"What the devil does it mean?" he said aloud.

He turned the leaves back. If only he could read those hieroglyphic notes! But they were meaningless. He stared again at the entries in the diary. Then a possible explanation presented itself. Of course! He should have thought of it before!

These notes related to Jo Lung's abandoned dope-running enterprise!

This theory almost covered the facts, but left him uneasy about the entry "B 4" until, sitting back in Kearney's chair and smoking furiously, a possible explanation came of this also. The cabins of all suspected persons, who might be revenue or police agents, had been marked by the plotters, and for some reason Eileen had fallen under suspicion.

"That's it!" he muttered.

At which moment the phone bell rang, and:

"Is that you, Haig? Kearney speaking. I'm hung up at the office. Have you grasped the facts about the memo book I pinched from Jo Lung's?"

"Some of them. It needs a good many hours' work and a man who knows Chinese. But I think it does the hanging trick. Good for you! Shall you be long?"

"I may be an hour. Can't say."

"Then I shall have to push off. I'll take the book with me. I'm on my way back to Limehouse—"

"Limehouse! Why, at this hour?"

"An awful thing has happened, Matt—Norwich has been murdered!"

"What!"

The words had a stupefying effect upon Kearney. Norwich murdered! . . . That cry in the fog! The shadowy figure in the doorway . . . the unmistakable figure which had looked in at the back of the taxicab!

"You left him somewhere at the corner of Three Colt Street?" Dawson Haig went on rapidly.

"Yes—yes—that's right."

"He was found, some time later, dead in the door of a warehouse. His pockets had been rifled—everything taken. Looked like the work of a common footpad, but I know it wasn't! I didn't know until Wilson phoned me and told me about the book. Now I've read your note and studied those entries, I'm pretty sure the murderer was looking for this incriminating evidence on the table before me! You had a d—d lucky escape!"

"But—" Kearney gasped—"how was poor Norwich killed?"

There was a slight interval; then:

"I don't know," Haig replied. "From the account given by Limehouse and confirmed by Leman street, he seems to have fallen in with a stray panther."

"Stray panther? What on earth do you mean?"

"Well, they tell me his throat is horribly torn, but not by a knife cut. The thing's teeth pierced his jugular. He bled to death. Thank God you're safe, old scout."

"But—the Wallaroo. . . ."

"I'm putting a good man aboard the Wallaroo. . . ."

CHAPTER III

The person variously known as "Yu'an" and "Excellency," wearing a plain blue house robe, paced up and down Jo Lung's office. The dark-eyed woman seated in a chair near the door watched him uneasily.

"They do not return," he crooned presently. "This may mean death, but you sit there very quietly, tender blossom."

"What can I do?"

"You have done all that it lies in a woman's power to do. You have perhaps ruined me. Jo Lung, who did his share, will fall in that ruin, and Polodos with him."

He continued to walk up and down, once pausing to glance at a clock on the writing table.

"We are watched," he said, in his reedy voice, "because of the trade, the petty trade, which is done here. And because of a series of blunders, those who are wtaching these small things may be rewarded unjustly by a glimpse of the great."

Ceaselessly he paced the floor, until:

"Ali left more than an hour ago," said the woman suddenly; "and we cannot trust the Adder. If he has. . . ."

"His orders would justify it." Into the high voice crept a soothing note. "What does it matter, most beautiful, provided that it corrects the consequence of your folly?"

"My folly!" the woman exclaimed, and laughed indignantly. "How was I to know when I saw the man pick the book up that it was not his own—that it meant so much?"

"A woman who is beautiful," the Chinaman replied softly, "is desirable. But there are many. A woman who has not only beauty but also intuition is a worthy companion."

He resumed his promenade and presently began to laugh. As the short squeals of his evil merriment rose higher and higher, reaching a note unattainable by any normal human voice, the woman shrank back in her seat.

"Tonight," said the man who laughed, "I shake off the dust of England from my feet forever, or I lay my bones in this cold island."

"Let us start!" the woman implored. "What are we waiting for?"

"Tender flower," the reedy voice replied caressingly, "a clever man knows how long to wait. It is only the fool who flies when no enemy pursues him. I have promised you a rope of pink pearls twice as long as your body. This, also, is the length of the rope used at executions in England."

* * * * * * * *

Dawson Haig sat back in the chair, replacing the telephone. A tramcar was passing along the embankment beyond the gardens. He knew those all-night trams with their cargo of weary Fleet street workers. He listened to the familiar sounds audible through an opened bedroom window behind him.

"His throat was mangled as though he had met a wild animal . . . the jugular had been penetrated. . . ."

That was what Leman street had reported. Automatically his hand touched the little leather-bound memo book. In leaving the establishment of Jo Lung, Matt Kearney had picked up something which meant life or death to. . . someone.

Haig believed he knew that someone's name; began to believe that what he had failed to find in Singapore might lie here under his fingers.

"The jugular . . . penetrated. . . ."

He no longer doubted that poor Norwich had been followed by agents of that someone. And for this—this very book upon the table!

Yes! here lay the clue, if only he could unravel it. . . . Here, on the table, lay something which meant the hangman's rope for the Big Chief!

Good G—d! It was maddening! He bent again over the pages of the diary. And now, suddenly he found himself listening—listening for what?

"He bled to death. . . ."

Dawson Haig thought of those words, and, at the same moment, thought he detected a faint sound in the bedroom behind him!

He sat rigidly still. Definitely, something was moving in the bedroom—gently, lightly.

Haig turned very quietly in his chair and looked towards the half-open door leading into Kearney's bedroom . . . silhouetted against it he saw a crouching figure. . . .

The fact flashed through his mind that he was unarmed. . . . Gently but unmistakably, he could hear the door opening behind him. With assumed indifference, he walked towards the lobby, and went out.

In five seconds he had snatched from the wall a Japanese sword (the lights in the sitting room had been switched off), unsheathed it— turned.

And as he turned—he saw It.

As a man he could not regard this visitant who fabulously had gained admission to these chambers. But he saw the Thing which, he could not doubt, had killed poor Norwich!

It was bending over the writing table—a small, thickset figure, enormously deformed, humped, grotesque . . . long arms and disproportionately large hands. But the head!—the head, glimpsed for a moment in the lobby light!

Nausea swept over him at sight of that small, malignant head, that nearly hairless head, like the skull of an infant. The brow was no more than an inch and a half high, and the nose upon a small, dark face, was represented by two distended nostrils. The chin retreated into the neck, but the upper lip below those flattened nostrils protruded inhumanly. . . .

The creature turned its little sunken eyes upon him. He saw two enormous teeth, exaggerated canines, curved downward over the lower lip—white, and gleaming. . . .

For one instant, a sort of supernatural dread held him spellbound. Then, sword in hand, he leaped.

But, quickly as he leaped, the Thing was quicker. Like a shadow, the white-fanged horror sprang through the bedroom door.

Haig lunged wildly. The blade of the Japanese sword passed completely through a lower panel as the abnormally active fugitive crashed the door fast behind him. Haig threw himself against it, and as it swung open he crashed forward, face downward upon the bedroom carpet.

He was up in an instant, and sprang to the light switch. The room was empty! The window was more widely open, and, racing across, he craned out, looking down the face of the building into the shadowy court below.

Something that looked like a big cat was moving twenty feet underneath. Even as he looked, it had gone—fading, had disappeared. He would have been prepared to stake all he possessed upon the impossibility of any human being climbing down the face of the building at that point. Yet, he had seen it accomplished!

He thought of the creature's sunken, blazing eyes. It had been under the influence of drugs—was, for the time being, homicidal—endowed, probably by some preparation of Indian hemp, with supernatural daring and agility.

Running back to Kearney's writing table, he pulled up, fists clenched.

The memo book had disappeared!

* * * * * * * *

Absolute silence prevailed in the office of Jo Lung. The woman smoked cigarettes ceaselessly one after another. Yu'an paced the carpet with his heavy yet cat-like tread. Suddenly:

"We shall be trapped," the woman said. "Why are we waiting? All—or the Adder—may be caught as they return."

Yu'an glanced at the speaker through slit-like eyes. Then silently he extended a plump yellow hand in the direction of the wall behind the desk. In one of the openings of the switchboard glowed a tiny speck of light.

"The blue lights are on," he returned contemptuously. "Even if we were surrounded—neither would be taken."

Came the muffled note of a phone bell.

Yu'an stepped quickly to the table and took up the receiver. "Yes?" he said.

"Something is afoot," Polodos reported. "Shan announces that the party which set out from Leman street is now leaving Limehouse—bound in this direction. What are your orders?"

"As already arranged," the high, piping voice replied. "I am now going to join Jo Lung. There will be no sea tonight, so we shall cross in the cruiser."

"Where do you wish me to join you?"

"At Trieste on Thursday morning—the usual place."

Yu'an replaced the receiver.

"The police! I knew it!" cried the woman, springing up.

He faced her. "With you," he said softly, in Chinese, "the police are like an evil dream. One would think, Orange Blossom, that you feared them. This is not flattering to me."

His voice rose very high on the last note. The woman called Orange Blossom summoned all her natural arrogance to confront him, but that cloak of high disdain which she wore so gracefully somehow had slipped from her.

As the portly Chinaman moved slowly in her direction, she shrank back, nearer to the door. With a curling smile of arched red lips he turned aside, slipped off his blue house garment, which he hung in a cupboard and resumed his heavy overcoat, taking up the broad-brimmed black hat from the table. Then:

"Come," he said, "we are going. Jo Lung waits for us."

* * * * * * * *

Inspector Eddy of Leman Street had placed his men with care. It would have been difficult for a rat to enter the premises of Jo Lung without attracting the attention of one of them. His dispositions effected:

"That ought to do," he said to the detective sergeant who accompanied him. "Scotland Yard seems to think that the murderer will make for here tonight; if he does, he'll fall into the net."

In a mean house near the corner of a mean street, outside the cordon drawn by the police around the suspected premises, a light shone behind a blue shade of an upper window. On the opposite side of a second, wider thoroughfare a furtive figure crept along close to the dingy shops. It paused, turned, and seemed to sink into the shadows again.

It next appeared, this slinking shape, at a spot east of the treasure house of Jo Lung. At the end of a little courtyard upon which several mean residences opened, a blue-shaded fanlight was dimly illuminated.

The lurking figure became merged in shadows once more . . . then immediately opposite a narrow alley it stood watching.

At the far end a dim yellow light was visible. The indeterminate shape darted across, then swiftly slipped aside, and exercising a strange affinity with darkness, became magically lost again . . . except that reddish eyes—like the eyes of a watching leopard—gleamed in the dusk.

Some one was coming out—some one who had stopped dead at the moment that that elusive thing darted across his path.

There was a moment of silence . . . a soft whistle—two minor notes. It was answered from the lee of a high wall. Thereupon a reed-like voice spoke rapidly in Chinese: "Ali is here. Follow swiftly. Do not show yourself."

Yu'an came out into the street. Beside him was a small figure so muffled that, beyond the fact that she was a woman, no one could have identified her. They set out in the direction of the river.

Ten paces they had gone when a figure appeared from the alleyway and glided in the same direction. Close behind him, stooping, ape-like, came another. And this singular procession headed toward the Thames.

A wicket gate was opened, and a deserted yard crossed. Out onto a wharf Yu'an led, and down slippery wooden steps to where, riding the sluggish tide, a boat was moored. Jo Lung assisted his passengers on board. The following shades, one swift behind the other, leaped on board also.

As Jo Lung cast the painter loose and took to his oars:

"Quick!" Yu'an spoke the word in Chinese upon a note high with excitement, "Which of you has it?"

A large, claw-like hand was stretched back to him . . . and in it was the green-bound memo book!

"How many?" he asked.

"One."

Whereupon he began to laugh, that high, uncanny laughter which seemed to harmonize with the creaking of Jo Lung's oars. . . . Jo Lung rested on his oars, and:

"Police patrol," he said. "Shall I pull for the bank, my lord?"

"Fool! They would hear the oars. The tide is carrying down to those barges. Stand by, my friend, with the hook, and when we reach the first of them, cling tightly."

* * * * * * * *

"Cut outside those barges, Mason," said the officer in charge of the river police launch. "I want to get a closer look at that smart motor cruiser lying in the Reach."

"It belongs to Mr. Van Steyn, the American sportsman. It has been under repair in Bulker's yard. I suppose the repairs have been completed, and they meant to go down this evening but were held up by the fog."

"Where the devil are they going? This is no season for motor cruising."

"I don't think there's anybody on board except a scratch crew. They intend to take her round to Cowes, I expect."

"Is that so? Well, edge in close, dead slow, and let's have a good look."

The river police drifted alongside the spruce-looking craft—a forty-foot motor cruiser. Her paint work was very new, but of a queer battleship gray, unusual in pleasure boats. There was nothing to show that there was anybody aboard.

But when, half an hour later, Jo Lung's party drew alongside, two very active Asiatics appeared above the bows of the motor cruiser. Having assisted Yu'an and the woman aboard, they rapidly hauled up and disposed of a great number of small packing cases stowed in the stern of the boat.

These contained the opium destined for Australia—which Dawson Haig had been covering.

Picturesque for Afternoon Wear

PATTERN 9311

A little bit demure, a little bit picturesque, and a very pleasing fashion is this afternoon dress. The wide drop-shoulder yoke continues in a panel to the hem—and gives youth in doing so. The soft gathers and the tiny tucks at the waist add to the feminine, wearable quality of this gown which will grace all afternoon occasions. For wear right now it is new and right--make it in one of the melodious, color-harmony prints that will enhance your own natural coloring—when coatless days arrive choose a cape-line or bonnet brim hat—stunning!

Pattern 9311 may be ordered only in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40. Size 16 requires 3⅜ yards 39 inch fabric.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Address your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York.

"I am surprised to learn that some of the college boys don't want to fight for their country," said Miss Cayenne.

"They are devoted to art."

"That is quite proper. I don't see the patriotic advantage in encouraging football players to slug or glee club prima donnas in trying to scratch each other's eyes out."

Secret in a Labyrinth

"She told me that you told her the secret I told you not to tell her."

"Hm-m, I told her not to tell you I told her."

"Well, don't tell her that I told you she told me."—Hudson Star.

A Long Pie

It was her first attempt at cooking, and when her husband came home he saw a very long pie on the table.

"Whatever is that?" he asked.

"I couldn't get any shorter rhubarb," she replied.—London Tit-Bits.

Smooth; Smoothe

There is no known reason for spelling smooth without a final e, for it rimes with soothe. In the period about 1870, in England, an attempt was made to introduce a final e, but the effort gained no permanent following. In 1830, the verbs to wreathe, to loathe, to seethe, and to soothe, were all spelled without a final e, although breathe, bathe, sheathe, and clothe (though spelled cloathe) had the final e to indicate a soft th. This inconsistency was remedied in most instances; but we still have the verbs to mouth and smooth, and the prepositions beneath and with without a final e, though in each instance th is properly soft.—Literary Digest.

COOLIDGE SHOWN AS SHREWD, BUT KINDLY HEARTED

A Calvin Coolidge who sold his cast-off clothing to a second-hand man, who chased a bootlegger out of his office, and who let a window sill burn in his house to warn his boys to be careful with candles, is revealed in an installment of Grace Coolidge's, "The Real Calvin Coolidge," in Goodhousekeeping Magazine.

John Coolidge confesses his indignation at finding a newspaper photograph of his father in shirt sleeves, with saw in hand, pretending to build a toy motor car.

"Father," John says, "was running for office, as was his custom in the fall of the year. A cameraman had induced the pose, but it was my car. I could scarcely believe my eyes."

George A. Dragon, Northampton barber, unwittingly gets back at John for telling tales on his father.

"One time," Dragon contributes, "I asked about his sons, who were in school at Mercersburg.

"'I guess they must be all right, Mr. Coolidge replied, "they're always wanting something.'"

Ralph W. Hemenway, Coolidge's law-partner in Northampton for 18 years, who has never before given an interview or written about him, recalls that he once received the following note from President Coolidge from the White House:

"My Dear Mr. Hemenway:

"You have at Hampton safety deposit 2 Lib Bonds $50 each. See if any are due Sept. 15 current and if so have Tr. Co. collect them and credit my acct.

"Yours,
"Calvin Coolidge."

The interest due was $2.12.

Hemenway recalls another occasion, however, that brings out the late President's kind-heartedness and liberality. When Hemenway was in need of funds owing to the closing of a local bank Coolidge gave him a check for $5,000 and offered as much more as he might need.

German Umbrella Slump

Because one cannot carry an umbrella when wearing a uniform and maintain one's dignity, the rain shields have gone out of style in Germany. As a result 150,000 people in the umbrella industry have been thrown out of work, and manufacturers are seeking ways and means to bring the umbrella into its own again.

MEXICO ON PARADE

Ellsworth Floyd Whalen

Politicians and diplomats of foreign nations would crucify Mexico because she believes in the principles of socialism. No politician or diplomat seems to be alarmed over a little red book published by Mrs. Albert W. (Elizabeth) Dilling, of Kenilworth, a Chicago suburb. This little book contains names of 1300 radicals and is used by the Bureau of Criminal Investigation of the New York police department. Among those listed as radicals, appears the name of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who is described in the book as a "Socialist sympathizer and associate, pacifist, co-worker with many radicals, some of whom have been appointed to government positions by her husband." Perhaps some of Mexico's critics are spending their socialistic prejudice on the wrong nation.

* * * * * * *

General Pascual Ortiz Rubio, former President of Mexico, understands the American people. The distinguished former Mexican chief executive has created a plan to improve American-Latin American international relations. General Rubio's plan proposes the founding of a powerful, cultural Spanish-American League whose main function would be to promote closer relations between the United States and Mexico. This Spanish-American League would establish Spanish-American colleges within the great universities of the United States and teach students and adults alike, the Spanish language, Latin-American history, geography and culture; the classes in the subjects mentioned, would be under the supervision of competent Latin-American instructors.

* * * * * * *

Let us read the words of this learned Mexican scholar on his Spanish-American League. General Pascual Ortiz Rubio tells us, "History taught in schools of the world is often based on untruths. In so far as North and South America are concerned we could remedy the situation.

The Spanish language could be taught to everyone in this country, just as all Latin-Americans here should certainly learn the English language.

Our plan would be incomplete if we reached only college students and adults. Elementary conferences, simple talks in Spanish dealing with current matters of special interest to Spanish-American countries, should be arranged in schools, chamber of commerce halls and public auditoriums.

Secondary courses for business men and women, and the public in general should be arranged on the elementary plan, but with added cultural themes, art, literature and science. These same conferences should be arranged for Spanish residents, the lectures to be given in English. How much easier it is to understand a people whose language is not strange to us." General Rubio is to be commended for his sincere efforts to promote international friendship; he blames writers indulging in personal racial prejudices for numerous misunderstandings arising between Mexico and the United States.

* * * * * * *

The Roman Catholic church opposes the establishment of public schools and education in Mexico. An excerpt taken from The Tidings, the official Catholic organ of the Diocese of Los Angeles and San Diego, dated February 8, 1935, is as follows: "The President of Mexico was wrong again when he stated that 'it is untrue that the Government, or any institution connected with it, persecutes citizens because they profess the Catholic or any other religion.' A government that permits no more than 500 priests to minister to 14,000,000 Catholic Mexicans is a persecuting government. A government whose brutal soldiery has slain innocent people for harboring priests or for permitting religious services to take place in their homes, is a persecuting government. A government that refuses to allow the existence of private schools wherein religion may be taught is a persecuting government. A government that has confiscated all property ever devoted to religious purposes, whether owned by religious organizations or by private persons, and without compensation is a highway robber as well as a persecutor. A government that claims ownership of the consciences of children as well as of their teachers and textbooks and school buildings is a persecuting goverment."

George Bergman, member of the crew of the U.S.S. California, is home with his mother in Ocean Beach for a few weeks. George says he enjoyed the Pacific cruise a lot and was glad to receive The Ocean Beach News while aboard. The paper was then passed on to another local seaman, who in turn passed it on to another shipmate hailing from East San Diego.
